Captain Skids was the youngest robot in his police unit. But when war struck his world and the brother of their leader fled, Captain Skids went after him. The raw jump through the warp gate left Capt. Skids shaken up pretty bad. He crashed on Earth in a car lot. Liking the looks of a nearby sports car, Capt. Skids assumed its form. Getting used to humans proved to be difficult. One night while parked in a downtown district, several young men tried to break into him. Capt. Skids turned into his robot form and sent all of them to the hospital with severe trauma from kicking them. On another occasion he witnessed a robbery where one human shot another, which made Capt. Skids wonder if there was a war going on here just like on his world. While out on the highway Capt. Skids finally tracked down Big Bear, and went to work trying to bring him in. When a human was hurt during the scuffle, Big Bear scolded Capt. Skids and told him to recalculate what he was doing. The young robot sped off and began to really think things through. Capt. Skids still follows Big Bear wherever he goes, but now works to help humans in need instead of constantly hating them.

Somewhere in another time and another dimension, a war raged between two robot social classes. When it became too much, one of the leaders fled through a warp gate and ended up being thrown out of his reality and into this one. He crashed in the Nevada desert, destroying a parked tractor-trailer. This vehicle belonged to one Troy 'Bear' Peterson, an Army vet who was known for kicking butt at just about every truck stop he frequented. As the robot stood there, Bear barked up a storm. The robot looked at the ruined truck and in an instant transformed into an exact copy. Bear stood there in amazement and when the driver's door opened and the robot said "Get in." Bear knew he had a new friend. Not knowing how to pronounce the robot's name, Bear started referring to it at 'Big Bear'. The name stuck. The two traveled across America, stopping for pickups and recharging. One day while cruising down the highway Big Bear came across another of his race that was in the form of a car. The two vehicles stopped and Bear got out. Before he could move away, the car turned into a robot and attacked Big Bear. Bear was thrown over the side of a guardrail and smacked his head on a rock. Big Bear was able to drive the other robot away, but his friend was seriously injured. Big Bear took him to the local hospital and hit the highway hoping to avoid another encounter and has been on the move ever since.
